

Emergency Medical Services Adjunct Instructor

New Mexico State University Alamosordo (NMSUA) is seeking dynamic, qualified individuals to join the Emergency Medical System (EMS) faculty. The college provides EMS courses in First Responder, EMT Basic, EMT Intermediate, as well as EMS refresher courses. Courses are taught during daytime, evening and weekend hours in the Health Science Center located on the NMSUA campus in Alamosordo, New Mexico. Courses are also offered at Holloman Air Force Base and at the local volunteer fire departments.

The successful candidate must be committed to academic excellence and continuous improvement through professional development, assessment, program and course development, and creating a collegial environment of civility, collaboration and open communication. The college strives for a faculty of content experts who are also knowledgeable about best practices, innovative strategies, and instructional technologies that support teaching and learning. Will be required to collaborate with faculty, staff and students in a diverse and collegial organizational culture with high standards for performance. It is essential that the faculty remain current in EMS practice, EMS education, and trends in community college education through professional development, further education, and/or scholarship.

Associate's, Bachelor's, or Master's degree from a regionally accredited institution in emergency medical services (EMS) or a closely related field. Minimum of two (2) years of clinical/field experience in emergency medical services. Excellent written communication skills. Commitment to the community college philosophy and to teaching traditional and non-traditional students from a variety of backgrounds. Current, unexpired National Registry certification as an EMT-Paramedic. Current CPR certification (BLS for Healthcare Providers).

Position is a temporary, part-time position. Salary is commensurate with degree, licensure, and/or certification. Submit a resume and college transcript to Becky Ross, NMSUA Director Allied Health, Office: 170 or via email at bRoss@nmsu.edu.

NMSU is an EEO/ AA Employer. Offer of employment is contingent upon verification of eligibility for employment in the United States and upon completion of applicable background review.
